CARLOTTA'S
SECOND LOVE

"It's out of the question, Mark," and Carlotta's voice was very determined. "We are too utterly different in temperament, and besides, I have a theory that no girl should marry her first love."

"Rats!" Mark's explosive utterance matched the disgust in his look. Carlotta wasn't at all the sort of person from whom to expect theories, being plumply, prettily feminine, with wistful eyes, and a simple in the chinward corner of her cheek.

The girl drew her brows together in a little frown of displeasure. "I suppose that seems silly to you," she said, "but, conceding that I am somewhat fond of you, I am afraid it is probably a case of being in love with love—liking the candy you bring me, the orchestra seats for the best shows, and little attentions generally. A girl ought not to marry until she's had an opportunity to make comparisons."

"And by the same token," came back the man promptly, "I suppose I'd feel surer I loved you if you were the ninth or tenth on my list of lady loves, instead of being the first and only."

"Nonsense!" Carlotta lightly repulsed the compliment. "No man ever marries his first love, who was probably his Sunday school teacher. And, anyway, what proof have I that you really and truly do love me?" and she smiled teasingly.

Possibly it was that smile that did it. At any rate, Mark rose from his chair, speaking coldly, deliberately: "Carlotta, you've often accused me of not appreciating your work. Heaven knows that if you really were that rare bird, a genius, I hope I would not have the nerve to propose marriage to you. But it seems to me that you were destined for other things than musing up canvases with pictures that look to me like Italian scenes laid in Russia with Oriental foregrounds."

"However, I daresay that's where I show my ignorance. But as to this business of whether I really love you, this Tommyrot about marrying your first love—well, here's hoping your second love has better luck than I did!" and with a bow intended to be both slightly ironic and extremely dignified, Mark opened the door and went out.

Carlotta, astonished, looked after him doubtfully. Was he really accepting his dismissal with so little protest? Then she sighed. Poor old practical Mark!

So completely lacking any thinnest bit of creative genius which would help him understand her own intense yearnings for self-expression! So prosaically unromantic that he could not comprehend her desire to be sure that it was love with a capital L, he offered, before surrendering to it.

A month later Carlotta sold her first picture, at a price far less than she expected—but then, to sell one at all was something. And the girl regularly took a roundabout way home to look at it in the window of the small novelty shop where it was displayed along with crocheted outfits for infants and hand-painted place cards.

Evidently Mark had also seen the picture, with the artist's name plainly sprawled in the corner, for one night when he and Carlotta found themselves adjacent strap-hangers in the subway, he extended his congratulations. And Carlotta, frankly pleased, added to her thanks the little remark that she had missed his calls.

"Same here," had answered Mark, but, by Jupiter, he had been working his darned head off lately, and had had to let all social duties go hang. If Carlotta felt a touch of chagrin that she had become merely one of Mark Hastings' "social duties," her extreme, shy sweet smile at parting successfully concealed it from him.

"For Mark has a rival. A few days after the sale of her picture, the postman had brought Carlotta a letter whose writer, on delicately perfumed paper, begged her, in a flowing hand, to pardon his effrontery in addressing her, and to permit him to express his joy in her picture, which touched within him, so he wrote, a responsive chord. He signed himself, briefly, "her admirer, Gustave."

Other letters followed, of increasing bulk, whose contents took the entire work of art for their own, interpreted here and there with casual personal allusions calculated to arouse in Carlotta an inevitable interest in the writer. And Carlotta, recent graduate of a small town "art school," sat reverently at the feet of this authority and drank in his dissertations on pigments and shading and tricks of fore-shortening and anecdotes of the great masters.

Often she meditated on the utter dissimilarity of the two men. The very difference in their letter-writing methods was significant. Carlotta, fingering in her coat pocket one of Gustave's wistful letters, wondered if it were possible to be in love with two men at once. Certainly she had felt a very great deal of pleasure when he came to visit her, and she was too busy to call. On the other hand, wasn't she a little intrigued with this strange correspondent who so ably interpreted his—and her—soul in terms of art?

On the very day that Carlotta, with mingled expectancy and misgivings, had decided to yield to Gustave's plea that she meet him in a little-used room of the art museum, Carlotta met a friend who worked in the same building where Mark had his office as chairman of the trustees' committee. And across the white tiled table of the dairy lunch, Carlotta learned that Mark was investigating some unsate claim for damages, had fallen on an icy sidewalk and broken a collar bone or something. The friend was annoyingly inexact as to the extent of his injuries.

Consequently, Carlotta, seeking the selected place of rendezvous, was thinking rather more of Mark than of Gustave. Then a motionless figure in the far corner of the room caught her heart to skip a beat or so. Slowly he turned as she approached and she noticed, first, that his arm was in a sling, and second, that—that it wasn't Gustave—it was Mark!

"Mark!" she cried and her voice was glad. "Your arm—how is it and how odd you should happen here!"

But Mark didn't smile. "I'm ashamed of myself, dear," he began. "I wanted to show you that I could develop the artistic temperament, too. And, also, since you seemed to want a second love, I thought I had better be it! But now that it's over, I wish I had never started it!"

Carlotta, at first bewildered, was beginning to see a light. Yet she couldn't really believe, yet. And if it was true, why wasn't she furiously angry? "These letters," she said, shaking her head. "You couldn't have written those!"

"But I did," he confessed. "Remember my telling you how busy I was? Well, I'd been sitting up nights at the library, trying to get the books, cribbing art stuff from the encyclopedias. Then, I'd go home and write it up. And I apologize for my operations I cast upon Art. Gee, whizz! Anybody who knows the least thing about it has my profound respect—and then some. There's volumes on it!"

Carlotta was trying to adjust herself to his new attitude. She had felt she loved him all right. After all, perhaps it was the most satisfactory solution of her problem. She said presently, wondering how soon she could properly extend forgiveness. "I'll say so!" and Mark shook his head sadly, as if one who recalls bitter moments. "Of course, when I broke my arm it was all off and I decided I'd better call a meeting and get it over with. I don't blame you for thinking it a low-down trick."

"Mark," said Carlotta gently, "I did you an injustice when I gave you credit for no creative genius, and please ignore what I said about your lack of temperament. As for whether you really love me, why, when I think of how you hate letter-writing and then recall those letters—why, my dear, as a proof of love, swimming the Hellespont isn't in it!"

"Carlotta!" cried Mark. "Do you—can you—may I?"

CONGREGATION OF
BAPTIST CHURCH

Extends Heartly Welcome to Rev. S. and Mrs. Hassall.

A very interesting social gathering was held on Friday evening, January 15, at the Baptist church when the members of the church and congregation met to extend to their new pastor and his wife, Rev. S. and Mrs. Hassall, a very cordial welcome. The evening was full of interest, and a spirit of optimism prevailed. The chair was occupied by Mr. L. Baker, senior deacon of the church, who in a very happy speech extended welcome on behalf of the church to the new pastor and his wife. Mrs. Oulton ably rendered two solos: "My Ain Folk" and "Star of the East," and members of the choir sang a quartette. Speeches were the order of the evening. Rev. C. C. MacLaurin, Superintendent of Baptist Missions for Alberta, spoke very encouragingly of the union just consummated between Mr. Hassall and the Red Deer church and expressed the hope that a real forward movement had begun in the history of the church. Rev. W. T. Tapscott, who recently had occupied the pulpit, expressed his delight at being present at this recognition meeting, and congratulated the church on having secured Rev. Hassall for their minister. Mr. Tapscott's present location at Olds has enabled him to see some of the work accomplished there by Mr. Hassall and he was confident that if the spirit of loyal co-operation was manifested much good would be realized in the near future.

Mr. D. Bullard and Mrs. Bullard, who were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hassall, were also present. Mr. Bullard, as senior deacon and Sunday school superintendent of the Olds Baptist church, where Mr. Hassall has labored for three years, spoke in a very happy vein of his connection with his late pastor. He praised very highly the work done by Mrs. Hassall in the church and school and wished for both pastor and his wife a ministry that would be in every way successful.

The Rev. W. O. Brown and Rev. G. D. Armstrong both extended a hearty welcome on their own behalf and in the name of their churches. They had each known Mr. Hassall in his previous sphere, and enjoyed a friendship which helped them to anticipate a future of real usefulness for the Baptist church under Mr. Hassall's leadership. Mr. E. H. Hill and Mr. H. Kingzett supplemented the welcome of the chair in a few well chosen words.

Rev. Hassall had a great reception when he rose to respond. He made a strong appeal for the co-operation of all Baptists in the community so that the church might more efficiently proclaim the truth for which it stands. Mr. Hassall has had considerable experience in pastoral work, having been ordained some twenty-four years ago, and has served in the churches at High River, Viking and Olds.

RELIGION LIES
BENEATH HALF
IRISH TROUBLES

Old Faid of Catholic and Protestant Maintained in Some Parts.

Dublin.—There is nothing so ugly in the present situation in Ireland as the religious aspect of it. In the northern province there exists a perpetual menace of religious conflict. This is largely due to the numbers of the opposing creeds being so nearly balanced. Roman Catholics constitute one faction and Protestants of all denominations form the other; and upon those lines of religious cleavage the political parties are formed. The Catholics were Nationalists in the old days; they are now classed as Sinn Féiners. On the other hand, nearly all Protestants are Unionists, and as long as one can remember—it probably is long—there have been plantation days—the two parties have lived in constant fear of attacks, one from the other.

In past days the Catholics were rather subdued, for the simple reason that their religion forbade them to indulge in the use of force, and they were very kind. But in recent times legislation has swept away such disabilities

They may now be educated in the same schools with the Protestants; they may hold office without fear; they have even assumed certain appliances, which arouse the dislike and hostility of those who have been accustomed to lord it over them. Moreover, they have cherished the memory of the wrongs they have suffered in the past, and there is possibly a very human desire to "pay off the old scores."

GUILITY CONSCIENCE? Upon the part of the opposition, on the other hand, there is a possible consciousness of wrongs that they may have committed in the past, together with a not unnatural apprehension that the Catholics may contemplate reprisals.

That, in a word, constitutes the whole Ulster question, the whole trouble which now bars the progress of the country towards peace and harmony. It is a lamentable fact, but it is the naked truth. The Protestants of the north do not trust their Protestant neighbors. Neither do the Catholics trust them.

In the south, where the Catholics predominate, there is no religious question. And it is one of the remarkable features of the present situation that day after day the newspapers record testimonies innumerable from Protestants in the south as to the toleration and friendship of their Roman Catholic neighbors.

The Protestants of Ulster in Ulster have a majority, but if Ulster be merged into the rest of Ireland, say in a common parliament, Ulster Protestants will become a mere item in a helplessly minority. Consideration of this fact makes it easy to understand why Ulster fights even to the last ditch to maintain its own existence and its own individuality.

HON. G. P. SMITH
OFFERS BOARD OF CONCILIATION

Calgary, February 3.—The appointment of a provincial board of conciliation for settlement of differences between teachers and school boards, the board to consist of three members, one chosen by the government from six names submitted by the trustees, and the other two, one chosen by the teachers, one chosen by either of these two groups, the commission to be paid by the government and to travel from place to place settling disputes, was the solution offered by Hon. Geo. P. Smith, minister of education, for future educational troubles in Alberta.

Later the resolutions committee brought in a resolution along these lines which was adopted. Officers elected included: William Rae, Edmonton, president; T. L. King, Raymond, and Eugene Sly, Strathmore, vice-presidents.

POPULATION OF B. C.

British Columbia's population is 555,336, according to Dr. Henry Young, secretary of the Provincial Board of Health, who has made public his report for 1920. This total includes 25,649 Indians. The total population is an increase of 58,700 or a little more than 20 per cent. over the previous year.

The death rate for the whole province last year was 9.22, which is less than half the birth rate, which was 17.56. The total births for the year was 10,802 and the number of deaths 4,420. Marriages numbered 4,650, an increase over the previous year of 1,821. In 1919 there were 6,696 deaths, due largely to the influenza epidemic, while the birth rate was 15.83 per 1,000 of population, in that year.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 9th, 1921.

WELCOME TO THE SOLDIERS' WIVES

The soldiers' wives, under the auspices of the Soldiers' Settlement Board, are the guests of the citizens of Red Deer this week.

Every organization in the city is doing its utmost to make the visit of the ladies a pleasant and profitable one; and it is really a pleasure to see the way the people have taken up the idea and are working it out to a successful conclusion. God bless the soldiers' wives and their little ones, and the soldier boys scattered throughout the length and breadth of this Red Deer district may rest assured that nothing is too good for their loved ones while entrusted to the care of our citizens.

WORLD SHORTAGE OF MEATS

It is estimated that the world requires fifty billion pounds of meat annually and that while the population increased by $5,000,000 (that is from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000) between the years 1901 to 1914, cattle, sheep and hogs combined only increased 40,000 (that is from 1,065,000,000 to 1,105,000,000). This of course indicates that there is not only a shortage of meats in the world now, but that as the years go by it must become greater and greater. Dealing with this subject in an illuminative article in the December number of The Agricultural Gazette of Canada, Mr. P. E. Light, Chief of the Markets Intelligence Division, Ottawa, points out that general economic progress as well as the increase of human population and the status of living in the consuming world, makes fresh demands upon available land and tends to bring about a relative decline in the output of animal produce. This decline must be offset by an extension in live stock production sufficient to meet increased consumptive demand. Any great augmentation of population in Canada at the present time would find us in a situation where we would either be severely taxed to provide for the total domestic demand, or else compelled to curtail our export trade.

PRODUCTIVENESS OF SIBERIA

Col. George H. Emerson, who was sent to Siberia during the war to operate the Trans-Siberian Railway, says that when Siberia, China and Manchuria are developed and conducted on a sound basis the foreign trade of the Pacific coast will exceed that passing through American Atlantic ports.

He says: "The wheat-bearing soil tapped by the Trans-Siberian Railway is greater than the total acreage of the United States, Canada and Argentina combined. Even during the war, when most of the men were at the front, Siberia, with a population of only 15 millions, produced nearly 400 million bushels of wheat. We lubricated our car and engine wheels with butter.

Ten thousand carloads of beans dumped at Harbin more than two years ago were still there at the time of the present year, because no vessels or railroads were available to carry the beans to a market.

There is practically no market for butter, beef, hides, cheese and many other commodities which Siberia produces so bountifully.

and too much off-grades hurting good butter also; table stock, 30c to 40c; straight receipts, 20c to 30c. Creamery butter steady, with little good quality on hand. Cream and milk unchanged. Poultry steady, with fowl and chicken 15c to 20c; dressed 27c to 30c; storage stocks light. Potatoes dull and buyers scarce.

Eggs at a weaker market at Edmonton this week, and with imported stocks coming in, prices are due to go lower. Creamery butter, such as with wholesale prices to country points 55c, and for city deliveries 50c on cartons. Dairy butter still lacking a market. Cream prices unchanged; big season anticipated. Cheese factories are selling 27c to 28c, and keeping close watch on markets. Poultry prices are a little easier, with springs at 21c; fowl, 18c; turkey, 31c. Stocks are light, and shipments promptly absorbed; shipments light. Excesses Ration.

Shippers who use the express lines will have to readjust prices when new rates come into effect, which on commodities is to go up 20 per cent; on second class the increase is 25 per cent; on first class the increase is 35 per cent.

SOME VIEWS RE. TEACHERS' ALLIANCE

Dere Minister Editor—

I that I'd like you a little letter to tell you about a talk I had the other day with one of the men who are trouble making teachers, how I got his goat so to speak but in and try to bring to the top of a ladder where he's not to get a big tumble pretty quick.

I wrote before about how I don't like them cooperative people try to hurt Mister Burns who is our best friend with pigs. Well, I had hardly got could down when I saw the little teacher on Michener hill as I was bringing in my wife's pigs from Springle, and I must tell you of the quite Pat give me the 2 more cents for them for nothin' the co-operative folks.

People try to tell me about the big trustee meeting of the ministers at Calgary and he just let usin the teachers allans. How he didn't want nothin' to do with them and he'd threaten to leave the bunch of them even if he bevin' did. He was pretty sore on the minister and said all the teachers was to be notified and to be looked after by a other cooperative society and to be treated as reasonable human be.
